To her surprise Luella slept peacefully, and when she awoke it was later than she expected. She got out of bed and hurried into Enrico's bedroom to find that he was still asleep. It was with a feeling of relief that she went back to her own room. She would have felt guilty if Enrico had wanted her in the night and she had not heard him calling her.

The sun was pouring through the window. She stood looking out at the trees and the lake, thinking what a picture it made. It was exactly as she had expected England to look.

When she was dressed she found Enrico was awake and she helped him to dress. Then they went downstairs for breakfast. Luella expected to have to apologise to the Duke. When she entered the breakfast-room, however, Bates told her that His Grace had gone riding.
